Have you ever been welcomed by a cat which raised, and sometimes waved its paw when you walk into a store or a restaurant? Wait and take a closer look! It is not a real cat, but a cat statue. The cat statue is the famous Maneki-neko, a lucky thing from Japan. It is often believed that the Maneki-neko, or the lucky cat in English, brings good luck to people who own it.

Maneki-neko comes in different colors. White, black, and gold are the most common. Each means differently. White brings good luck, black gives good health and keeps bad things away, and gold invites money. You might even find a pink Maneki-neko, which is for those who want love.

There are different stories about the origin of this lucky cat. One goes like this. A long time ago in Japan, one day, as a king and his friends passed by a shabby temple, they saw a cat waving at them at the gate. Then they went in and met a monk, who owned the cat. The monk gave them tea to drink and talked to them. During the talk, the king was happy to learn some wise life lessons. He then gave the temple large pieces of land to grow rice. The rice brought the temple a lot of money. For people to remember the cat for bringing in the good luck, after it died, its statue with a raised paw was built. That was the first Maneki-neko.

Do you have a hard time and are you in need of some luck? If yes, a Maneki-neko may be a thing to have around.

Writer John Martin just won the biggest Writer's Award in our country. Martin started writing when he was only six years old. He said he loves words because they have helped him find an outlet for his thoughts and feelings. Writing is his life.

Martin's life has its ups and downs. He published his first book, My Stories and Songs, at the age of 11. It was a great surprise to the world because it was beautifully written, and the stories and songs are wonderful. After My Stories and Songs, Martin wrote another three books, Spiders and Bugs, Life in a Treehouse, and You Never Know. The last one won him Teenagers' Best Writing of 2001. In 2003, life gave Martin several blows, which made him stop writing. Martin's mother died in that year, and he felt it was the end of the world. To make things worse, he was sick and poor. When Martin almost lost his hope for life, he saw an old book, The Light of Life, in a second-hand bookstore. He read the book and was touched by the messages in it. He decided that he would write for his dear mother from then on.

In 2014, his new book, Many Thanks, Mother, came out. It soon became a hit. In it, Martin remembers his late mother, gives her his thanks, and celebrates his new life.

This Sunday afternoon, 3 o'clock at Bookworm Bookstore. Martin will read parts of this best-selling book to his readers. It will be a touching moment.
